Three prioritised findings

Each point identifies observed friction, why it may matter, and a next action.

01

Make the first service statement specific

OBSERVED FRICTION The opening screen says 'quality kitchens' but does not say whether the business designs, supplies, fits or renovates - or which areas it covers.

PRACTICAL NEXT ACTION Place one plain-language service and area statement above the first contact action.

02

Put project proof beside the quote route

OBSERVED FRICTION Recent work exists lower on the page, but a visitor reaches the enquiry button before seeing a project, review or clear process.

PRACTICAL NEXT ACTION Show one relevant completed project and one short 'what happens next' line beside the main quote action.

03

Ask for the information needed for a useful quote

OBSERVED FRICTION A generic 'contact us' path may start a conversation, but it does not help a homeowner know what to send or help the business qualify the job.

PRACTICAL NEXT ACTION Use a short request form that asks for postcode, photos, rough scope and preferred timing.
